Northeast
SUSTAINABLE
Communities Workshop

Now in its fifth year, the Northeast Sustainable Communities Workshop has grown in popularity with a record 375 attendees last year.

Why? This conference takes on the real issues facing those engaged in regenerating our communities. With a unique format, engaging everyone who attends the conference, this year we will face the reality of unprecedented weather events battering our systems and shaking our confidence in the status quo. We will challenge assumptions upon which current sustainability principles are based, and seek to identify pathways to a future that can stand up to the challenges ahead.

Starting from land recycling and the challenges of appropriate development, the conference topics will range from infrastructure development to renewable energy and new approaches to almost everything we now consider commonplace. We will engage policy leaders, practitioners, and visionaries who are working today to create a more resilient future.

Come join the conversation on March 5th at the Liberty Science Center in Jersey City.

AGENDA

REGISTER TODAY

The 2014 Northeast Sustainable Communities Workshop is being coordinated by the Brownfield Coalition of the Northeast (BCONE). BCONE is an organization comprised of industries, regulatory agencies, and consultants who have formed a not-for-profit group to advance brownfield redevelopment in the Northeast. BCONE provides education and networking opportunities at low cost to members of all sectors involved in the remediation, redevelopment, financing and conveyance of contaminated properties for reuse. BCONE currently serves the region of the Northeast United States, with active membership in the following states: Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, and Massachusetts.
