Program Summary:

This educational program will focus on key projects and evidence that shows the benefits derived from these projects, with particular attention paid to projects that have achieved the following:

- Farmland preservation for food security, local economic viability, and the benefits of agritourism

- Preservation projects in flood prone areas to mitigate flood damage, protect residents, and turn these areas into community assets
- Protection of wetlands to filter stormwater (reduce the frequency of combined sewer overflows and sanitary sewer overflows), soak up nutrients, recharge aquifers, and provide habitat
- Preservation and its benefits for human health in the urban areas
- The economic benefits of using natural systems to protect water quality and quantity
- Increased property tax revenue as a result of preservation projects, ‘the proximate principle’
- The importance of ‘Quality of Life’ in business location decisions
