HOW TO RESTORE CIVILITY IN PUBLIC DISCOURSE

Incivility impedes getting things done. It models destructive behavior and discourages new people from getting involved in public issues. After this participatory program, attendees will be able to explain what civility is, why it is important and how it relates to their individual life, their local government, state and nation.

Enduring Understanding:

Each person has a role in this world and their choice to be cooperative and civil or go into conflict affects the people around them, no matter who they are.

Essential Question/s:

What does civility mean? Why is civility important?

Objectives:

- Participants will understand the responsibilities of citizens
- Assess methods for respectfully dealing with differences.
- Analyze and evaluate conditions, actions, and motivations that contribute to conflict and cooperation.
- Develop an understanding of the role of civility in dealing with individual and group differences.

Applications:

This program will provide valuable training to anyone who works in, with or for groups where cooperation is vitally important to success. This includes public officials, leaders, managers, teams of workers, community volunteers and everyone concerned with the need to restore civility in public discourse.

WEBINAR: Energy Savings Improvement Programs (ESIPs: Learn How to Finance Your Building Upgrades through Energy Savings)
REGISTER

Energy efficiency is one of the best ways municipalities can save money and tax dollars. But, to get energy efficiency savings, you need the money to pay for building and equipment upgrades. Even when the savings greatly outweigh the costs over the lifetime of the upgrade, the upfront costs present a significant obstacle.

New Jersey local governments can promote energy efficiency with the use of a new financing tool. Energy Savings Improvement Programs (ESIPs) are a type of “performance contract.” The future value of the energy savings is leveraged to pay for the upfront project costs. Large-scale building upgrades high efficiency motors, transformers, water heater and boiler replacements and air conditioning units are now feasible options.

Very truly yours,

William G. Dressel, Jr.
Executive Director
