Courage To Connect NJ congratulates South Hunterdon for their landslide approval from the voters to regionalize their four school school districts into one last night.

Lambertville, West Amwell, and Stockton join the Princetons in demonstrating that this kind of change and progress is possible.

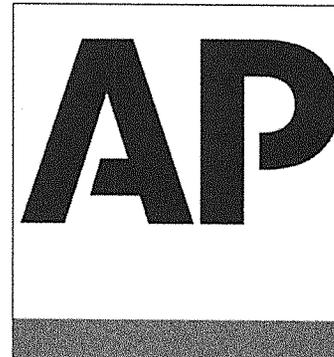

With living examples of municipal consolidation and school regionalization, there is nothing in the way for the next towns. You can be a leader in your community to build on these successes.

NJ towns approve school merger plan

TRENTON , N.J. (AP) - Voters in three towns have approved a plan to merge four school districts in southern Hunterdon County.

The Times of Trenton reports (bit.ly/19CWRb3) that voters on Tuesday passed referendum questions that would create a merged school district and dissolve the South Hunterdon Regional High School district and elementary school districts in West Amwell, Stockton and Lambertville.

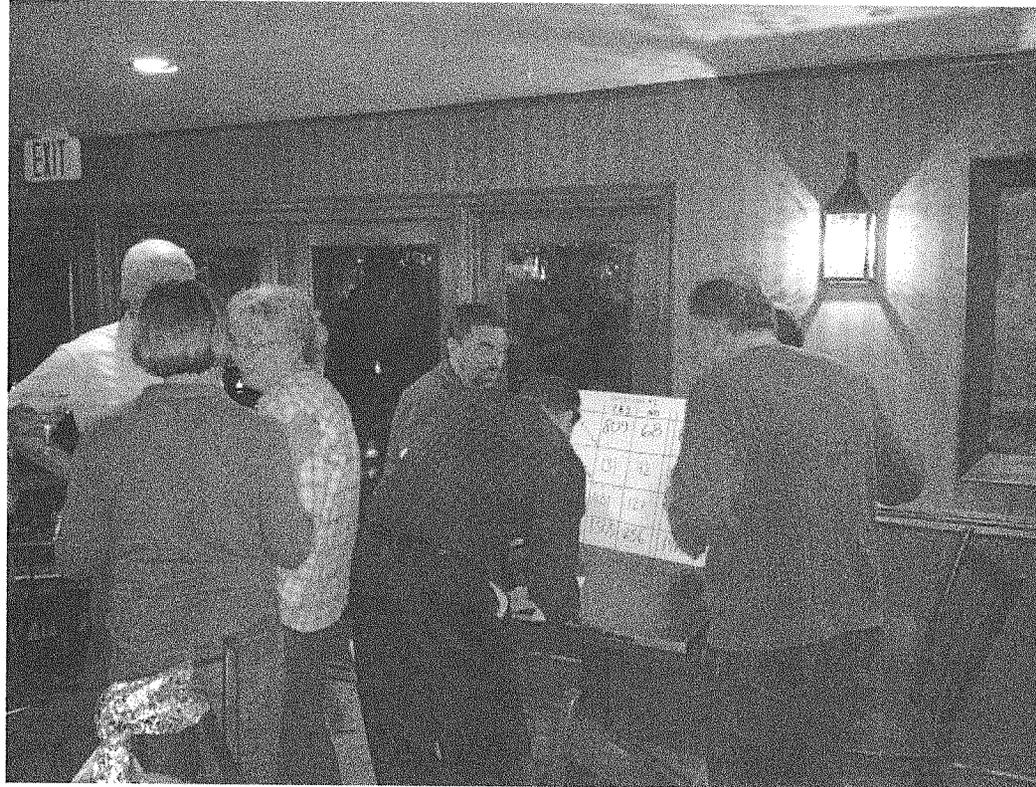

The executive director of a nonprofit that promotes the economic benefits of consolidation applauded the vote. Gina Genovese of Courage to Connect New Jersey said in a statement that the residents are "pioneers who had the courage" to create positive change.

Lambertville Board of Education member Derek Roseman tells The Associated Press that the decision was "truly a historic vote" by people willing to endorse regionalism "knowing their future is better off together."
