"My dad taught me how to swim and fish in the Rockaway Creek. My most cherished family memories come from the banks of this stream. Now I take my kids to my favorite spot and some days the water looks so murky.

How can I know if it is safe? Who can we trust to inform us?"

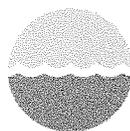

- A friend of Raritan Headwaters

Wouldn't you also appreciate knowing that the stream you love is safe for swimming and fishing for your children?

THE IMPORTANCE OF BACTERIAL MONITORING

Last year, with an equipment loan and training from the USEPA, our science staff and volunteers sampled impaired stream sites and non-regulated swimming areas in the Watershed for safety standards. The results showed that E. coli* bacteria exceeded safe levels in several locations, raising concerns for public health.

We must be able to continue monitoring bacteria levels in your streams. Having our own on-site lab will help us do that more effectively and efficiently. This will ensure that our water monitoring methods meet the rigorous criteria for use by state and federal decision-makers.
